ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We would like to thank, first, Randy Petilos, our editor at the University of Chicago Press, whose initial idea it was that we should publish a teaching volume to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the publication of the first volume in the series. This volume is the result of his suggestion.

We would also like to thank the editors of a number of volumes in the series and others who have taught these volumes for their contributions to this commemorative volume. Their names and a short vita may be found at the end of this volume.

We anticipate that we shall publish other teaching volumes based on the series as the number of texts in other genres grows large enough to warrant one. Our doing so will depend in part on whether this volume meets a need felt by teachers who offer courses that include one or more volumes from the series. We would very much appreciate the responses of those who read and make use of this volume.
