the wider context of Christian origins and development in the first and second centuries.

Both editors are glad to thank various people for their help in producing these volumes. We are grateful to Hilary O'Shea, who brought the proposal before the Delegates of Oxford University Press, and to Lucy Qureshi, who saw the volumes through from their acceptance by the Press until their publication. Dorothy McCarthy, Enid Barker, Amanda Greenley, Samantha Griffiths, and Jean van Altena each helped us to keep to a tight production schedule and gave valuable advice on many points of detail. Particular thanks are due to the anonymous reader who read a large typescript with great speed and equal care, and offered a number of helpful and incisive suggestions.

OUP provided financial support for our conference, as did the British Academy, the Zilkha Fund of Lincoln College, Oxford, and the Theology Faculty of Oxford University. We are glad to acknowledge the assistance of each. Adam Francisco provided indispensable help in running the conference website, which allowed delegates to read papers in advance, and was of great assistance throughout the planning and administration of the conference, as were Mel Parrott and her colleagues at Lincoln College.

Most importantly, both editors were overwhelmed by the support and interest shown by such a range of international experts in the study of the New Testament and early Christianity, and we are grateful to all who have allowed us to include their work in this publication. We hope that that these volumes will become a standard reference work for many years to come, and that they will provide a useful resource for future researchers in New Testament and Patristics.
