ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My e-mail records indicate that this book was first conceived in the spring of 2000, quite a bit earlier than I remembered. Apparently, I suggested the topic to Julian Deahl, who immediately asked me to edit the book. I see now that the original goal for publication—then thought to be liberal—was the end of 2003. Thus I thank Julian Deahl and his assistant, Marcella Mulder, not only for their encouragement, but especially for their patience. Brill’s anonymous reader provided many helpful comments as well. I owe a debt of gratitude to each author, of course. In fact, some chapters required an extraordinary amount of work and could easily have been developed into small books. I am especially thankful to those contributors who recommended other authors whom I might not have found otherwise. It was also very helpful that several scholars whose native language is not English nevertheless wrote their chapters directly in English, leaving me with little more than a clean-up job. Those who chose to compose their chapters in another tongue—French—benefited from William Owen Duba’s linguistic expertise and Brill’s generosity. For my introduction, I thank William Courtenay, Jerry Etzkorn, and, especially, Sylvain Piron for advice. Our cover illustration is due to the initiative of Kevin White; Lenore M. Rouse, Curator of Rare Books and Special Collections at the Mullen Library of The Catholic University of America, very kindly supplied the image from the library’s manuscript of the Quodlibeta of Thomas Aquinas. Finally, the University of Cyprus has provided much support.
